

MARQUIS DE MORES AGAIN

The Ex-Cattle Grower Taking a Prominent Part in Politics in France.

Minister Constans, His Old Enemy, Determined to Have Him in Prison.

An Interview With De Mores in Which He Tells How a Campaign is Run in France.

The Marquis de Mores, whose arrest and trial on a charge of an attempt at murder during the recent election at Toulouse resulted in the mere imposition of a fine, says a Paris cable to the New York World, is far from being out of the woods as yet in connection with the matter. M. Constans, the minister of the interior, against whom all the marquis' opposition was directed during the election at Toulouse, is intensely and bitterly disposed towards him, and seems determined to proceed against him as far as ever the laws of the land will permit. The Marquis de Mores, meanwhile, loses no opportunity of loudly complaining of the persecution to which he is being subjected.

M. de Mores has returned to Paris, and to-day received the World correspondent at his residence in the Rue Tilsitt.

"I am a personal enemy of Minister Constans," said the Marquis, "and have been so for the last five months. When in Cochinchina I made friends with a man who was at that time governor-general of Tonking, a certain M. Richard. He was disliked and feared by M. Constans. You may remember the mysterious circumstances which attended Richard's sudden death, and which gave rise to the most serious charges against M. Constans. When the general election came on, I went to Tonking for the express purpose of opposing the election of M. Constans as member for that city. On the very first day that I was there the police received orders from M. Constans to arrest me at all costs and under any pretext. In spite of this I carried on my work of opposition. I had such proofs of the tricks of the minister's partisans and of their intentions to take the election that I engaged a fighting army of two hundred men, and let it be publicly known that I should see that no nonsense took place around the ballot boxes, or that we should show fight. My men had instructions from me to rush the whole concern out of the window of the voting room on the slightest sign of trickery. M. Constans, on the other hand, through his agents, engaged three hundred ruffians, including many monarchs or police spies. These were paid to interrupt my meetings and thus to give on the first opportunity a pretext for having me arrested. On Saturday, Oct. 5, I had organized great meetings in one of the public halls of the town. M. Constans had been invited to attend and we had promised to see that he should be respected. He did not come, however. But about 5 o'clock, just as I was addressing the meeting, M. Constans' gang came along outside and began beating 'La Generale,' which is the signal of attack. At the same time these fellows commenced an attack on our meeting room. The windows were smashed with sticks and the riot was so great that it became impossible to continue the meeting. I therefore came out on to the street, accompanied by my men, who were armed with sticks. At the door I saw that the crowd of M. Constans' ruffians was so menacing that with the object of showing them that I intended to stand no nonsense, I drew my revolver and walked out with it in my hand. I had not gone three paces before four men sprang on me and arrested me. One of these men was in police uniform. I therefore made no resistance, but asked the constable why I was arrested. He replied that it was because I had drawn my revolver. Just then one of the crowd lunged at me with a spike. He missed me, but a second man, one of the four fellows who were hauling me off, I was taken off to prison, and in direct violation of the law, which ordains that during election time the tribunals shall be permanently in session, was kept in jail for two days. On Sunday I insisted on being told on what charge I was being held. I was told that it was on a charge of being an accomplice in an attempt of willful murder against a police agent—charge which, in France, might entail the penalty of death. It since has come to my knowledge that on that very same Sunday the prefect of the department sent for the magistrate who was to try my case and told him that if he did not treat me to all the rigors of the law, he would run the risk of getting bounced from his post. The magistrate in question dared the prefect to make that statement before witnesses, and added that he should act as he thought just, and not otherwise. When my trial came off a day or two ago, the charge of attempted murder was abandoned. M. Constans, having been successful in getting elected, could afford to be merciful. The other charge, however, was vigorously supported by a number of false witnesses who lied in a shameless manner. Their case, however, was too weak, and the trial resulted in my being fined $20."

The World correspondent hereupon remarked: "Although you are a personal enemy of M. Constans you will admit that he is a very strong man?"

"M. Constans is a very strong man," said the marquis, "but he is utterly unscrupulous. He is the paid agent of a number of big bankers who exploit France, and he is the same duncie of the Place de la Bourse. His election was secured by the most fraudulent maneuvers. Forged and false voting tickets were distributed by the wholesale, and I have in my possession not less than eighty such tickets, which were seized by my agents in one section alone. It was one of the most scandalous jobs ever seen. In America they would not have stood such an election for three hours. How long they will stand this violation of voting liberty here I should not like to say. But I am afraid that before long there will be bloodshed in France."

"And Boulanger?" asked the correspondent.

"Finished—completely finished," said the marquis. "He only represents an idea—his personality is nothing. The idea survives, though the man has gone under. It is the wish of many thousands, indeed the majority of those who voted for the general's candidates, to save the republic and to prevent its being any longer the milch-cow of a few bankers and of their tools. We want to decentralize the government in France, which is to-day as Napoleon I made it, with a mere republican stamp on it for show. As for Boulanger, his role is finished. He can never rise again. That was another of M. Constans' master strokes. He bribed Mme. Bonnemain, Boulanger's female companion, to use her influence with her weak general and to get him to commit a series of blunders beginning with his flight to Belgium and ending with his voyage to Jersey, all of which so disgusted his former supporters."

These are the accusations which the Marquis de Mores is freely and publicly making throughout France against Minister Constans. The latter is intensely provoked thereby, and it is reported that he is taking steps to set aside the recent trial of M. de Mores and to obtain a new hearing of the case, with a view to obtaining a heavier sentence against the marquis.

The animosity of the Marquis de Mores against M. Constans is due to the fact that the latter while governor-general of French Cochinchina, rejected and opposed all the marquis' schemes for the construction of a line of railway to the Chinese frontier. M. de Mores had spent considerable time and money in working up the enterprise and was intensely indignant when his plans were rejected. The real reason of their rejection was due to the fact that there are several prominent Paris financiers possessed of government backing and influence who have obtained a concession for the very work which the marquis offered to accomplish at a far smaller cost.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that, too, by a lady in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking the first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus writes W. C. Hamrick & Co. of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle at R. S. Hale & Co.'s drug store.

"Untold Agony from Catarrh."

Prof. W. HARNER, the famous mesmerist, of Ithaca, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. RUSHING, Esq., 292 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils, thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

A complete Treatise on Catarrh, giving valuable hints as to clothing, diet, and other matters of importance, will be mailed, cost-free, to any address, on receipt of a two-cent postage stamp.
